

If I could be one word in the English language I would be the word „However”. „However” is an individualist, usually separated from the others with a comma. Nevertheless, he can't exist in language's society alone. „However” without any support is like a pizza without cheese. We see that the more words surround him the better he feels.

Furthermore, „However” has always something to add. What a huge knowledge must he have to find a weak point in each issue. He could be shocking, surprising, often cruel. Sometimes other words don't agree with him but on the other hand they know that it's impossible to keep him quiet.

Bartek